

Does music education make my child smarter academically?

"Time" magazine article recently stated that if school boards understood biology, every student in America would be learning an instrument by age five. It seems that music education wires young people for success, teaches them the unteachable and makes them smarter. — Taken from the article "Why Am I Paying All This Money" in the May-July 2004 issue of The SCORE.